Hope Buses

India is a very big country with more than a billion people. A lot of families live outside big cities like New Delhi – a city with more than 32 million people. Life is difficult and it is often impossible for children to go to school. Sometimes they don't live near a school or their family doesn't have enough money, so they have to work.

Marlo Philip is the director of an organization called TejasAsia. His organization uses buses to take schools to children. Every day, four Hope Buses go to different places in New Delhi and they become classrooms. Every day, about 60 children get on each bus and start their lessons. They want to learn. They sit together and study Maths, learn how to read and write, and learn how to be healthy. They don't have computers, but they have books and there's a television. The lessons are fun and the children are cheerful. After their lessons, they always have a hot meal.

When they grow up, the children all want to do different jobs. Preeti is eleven years old and she likes coming to classes on the bus. She wants to be a teacher.
